Caitlin's romantic time alone with Asher is again spoiled by trouble in their fantastical world. A letter arrives from an expensive mountain resort pleading for their help, and out of curiosity they travel to the hot springs. When they arrive not only are the guests stampeding to get to the healing waters, but so are the wild animals. After the dust settles Cait is introduced to the

Proxy, the elf who is second only to the reclusive Manager as leader of the elves. From him they learn that trouble has plagued them for months and the situation grows more dire with each passing day. The other residents of the mountain are not helping matters, as the village of the aware-hares now believes that the elves have lost their mandate from the god of the hill, Athas, and only the hares remain as the one true children of their deity. That pits their ambitious explosive digging against the concerns of the Proxy as more than wild animals shake up the place. Cait and company have a monumental task before them to bring peace to the mountain and resolution to the Proxy's troubles. While trouble piles on top of trouble, Caitlin finds herself being pushed away by her dragon lover. Between the mountain rumblings and Asher's increasing aloofness, Caitlin begins to wonder if something more isn't going on, both among the dying trees and her lover's dying affection. Determination and a stubborn head will lead her to the truths, but will it get her out of it alive? They team up to find a healer, but the truth could tear them apart. After six quiet months, the Wilcox clan's witch-finding software finally gets a ping. The article is cloaked in careful, journalistic neutrality, but Laurel Wilcox knows a solid lead when she sees one. Soon Laurel's headed for

Lake Tahoe to hunt for a healer who mysteriously appears when he's needed, then disappears into the forest. She hopes she won't screw up her first solo mission — and betray her clan's trust. Which is why it's the worst possible time to be attracted to a handsome, non-witch civilian. Jason Ludlow's dual abilities of altering his appearance and hiding his spark of magic from other witch-kind make him ideally suited to hunt for the elusive healer his clan desperately needs. He never expected to meet another witch — a distractingly pretty Wilcox witch — on the same mission. Both hiding their motives behind white lies, Laurel and Jason team up to find the healer...and give in to an attraction that's both comfortable and sensually intense. But their idyll can't last. Since Witches came out of the broom-closet in the early 21st century, they have worked alongside humans as police officers, healers, stock traders, and more. But they aren't the only paranormal entities in our world... Police officer and Witch Donata Santori spends her days interrogating dead witnesses by summoning their spectral forms. The only problem is, his chest doesn't have the mark and I worry he might be wrong. Llyr is everything I could ever want, but how can I give him my heart when he might end up fated to another?

It's not every day a fated mate bond causes griesha. Crysta's companions may have the scrolls, but their troubles are far from over. Everyone apparated to the Unseelie palace...everyone except Crysta. Jareth fears his fated mate may never make it out of the Seelie palace alive. He's got one shot to save the love of his life, and he has a royal Hag and a fearless Fae assassin to help him get Crysta back. And they're just barely figuring out who their real enemies are. From full-sized Dragons, to supernatural sea creatures, to murderous Mermaids, and warmongering Goblins, this group of paranormal misfits have their hands full.
